

GQLIVE

Travel.Fashion.Lifestyle

An exquisite 17th-century French manor home, hidden in the heart of the verdant countryside of Juillac-le-Coq in south-west France... A home furnished with sublime French craftsmanship complete with landscaped gardens, swimming pool and its own vineyard and bakery...

This is Le Logis; the brand home of Grey Goose, an extraordinary vodka with a truly out-of-this-world dwelling. It's one that has always been out of bounds to the public, until now.

Over two weekends this summer, Le Logis is opening its doors for the very first time, giving exclusive access to a world of beautifully crafted summer moments and experiences in a series of weekend escapes that simply cannot be found elsewhere.

Grey Goose's team of experts are always on hand, too; offering cocktail masterclasses, local dishes and an exclusive behind-the-scenes tour hosted by Grey Goose creator and Cellar Master François Thibault (left), plus in-house bakery sessions where the same wheat used to create Grey Goose's rounded and smooth character is crafted by guests into the perfect French baguette.

This is a weekend break where the only dilemma comes from whether you should indulge in a game of pétanque on the lawn, ride a vintage bicycle around the in-house vineyard or simply recline by the pool with a perfectly crafted cocktail.

Luxurious. Discreet and utterly enthralling. This is Grey Goose distilled into a secret, unforgettable getaway experience.

The French connection

Grey Goose opens up the doors to the French home of its ultimate premium vodka for the very first time

Le Logis is open on 4-6 and 25-27 August. To book go to luxe travel experts Brown and Hudson (brownandhudson.com/greygoose). Prices from £1,300pp including return airport transfers from Bordeaux and Angoulême, two nights in a twin or double room and all meals and experiences.